Since the Master Builder method turned into specialized professions, there has been a sense of mistrust between construction and design professionals. It doesn't have to be that way; this book seeks to determine the cause of such animosity and present solutions based on education practices and project delivery methods. This book isn't meant to propagate the issue, but simply start the conversation among professionals in the building industry. It is encouraged that both parties read this with an open mind, and a willingness to get along, because ultimately architects and contractors want to achieve the same goal: a beautiful and complete project.
