Excerpt from Appalachian State University, Vol. 68: Rhododendron 1990

Diversions are necessary. They serve as amusement and relief from the daily routine. There was so much going on at Appalachian State this past fall and spring, that we here at the Rhododendron decided you needed a little diversion to end the year.

Nine of your fellow students decided to divert some extra time and energy to re¬cording the last half of 1989 and the dawning of the new decade for you. We added a new twist this year. As you turn the pages, you will not find a sports section or an academic section. This yearbook, unlike its' predecessors, just happened. We lived August and wrote about its' high points. We did the some with ever other month of the year, until it come to March. We kinda guessed, using carefully calculated data from previous months, what the last few months of school would be like. We threw in the essential, unchangeable information haphazardly through the book so that you would have to look at all four hundred pages.
