Famous bad boy with tattoos, a lip ring, and piercing green eyes? No sweat. It’s not like he’s special. Except he is. It’s not like he’s over-the-top gorgeous. Except he is. And it’s not like I have zero self control. Except I don’t seem to around him… Ronnie Hamilton has no interest in the men at her school. Being from a small southern town, they all live and breathe football, and she gets enough of that from her brothers and dad. The last thing she needs is some guy sniffing up her alley, especially when it’s her senior year of high school and she doesn’t plan on sticking around long after graduation. But then he walks in. Gibson Mitchell is in hell. Given two choices, he decided Freedom, Alabama had to be the better option, but after spending a few days in this town, he realized maybe the people aren’t so different than what he’s trying to escape. So used to LA socialites and gold diggers with fake tans, daddy issues, and a price to sell even the lamest of gossip, Gibson isn’t sure he can trust anyone. And then she caught his attention. She’s beautiful, down to earth, and best of all—she’s genuine. Ronnie is focused on chasing her dreams and becoming her own person, but will fear of her parents’ rejection hold her back? Gibson is determined to change his course in life and make a name for himself, but will his past continue to define him? Brought together by a term paper and a soul deep attraction, will the judgment and opposition surrounding their potential tear them down before they have a chance to begin, or can they be each other’s Fresh Start?
