Book of Bo: More Gems of My Life Steven Bo Keeley
My life follows the vicissitudes of Buck the dog in Jack London's Call of the Wild. We were raised by the hearths in comfortable California homes, then allowed into measured backyards, left home after a customary youth, and then broke loose, until a final pursuit in a Call of the Wild. This phoenix of gems bursts from a One-Ton Autobiography of Catman Keeley that has shipped around the globe for thirty years, and then, gathered dust in my Sand Valley, California trailer. Rather than have it covered and never seen, I decided to select the gems and turn them into the Book of Bo. The essential ingredients in a great adventure biography are an interesting character who breaks the mold while doing extraordinary things in finding his own truths that may suit others. 'Safe return doubtful', as Shackleton's apocryphal newspaper ad soliciting Antarctica volunteers put it, must precede each near-death escape. The lion's share of the book is these, as the tales march and a nickname emerges… Catman, who has nine lives. This is the second book of my autobiography series. Each anecdote is as accurate as my half-century old journal and senior memory. Such stories are as old as civilization, though less common today in a world shrunken by transportation and internet. The knowledge, at the very least, within these covers of strange new lands and exotic new people, are personal and considerable. And those who stay behind will still ask: What was it like? The foundation of this book is having survived a cat’s life – nine. The inspiration is a smile for you.
