GIVING UP THE GHOST (The Ghost Series Book 2) Emma Daniels
Sean O'Shea has spent the past hundred years as a ghost, lost between worlds, because he was never able to come to terms with the way his wife died.

The powers that be decide it is time for Sean to move on, so they give him one more chance at life.

But life isn't easy when you've been a ghost for a hundred years, only able to see the world through television. The only person who was able to communicate with him in all this time has rejected him in favour of another man.

To his luck, Sean meets Belinda Carter, an independent, modern woman with a nostalgic streak. She finds herself falling for the charming, old-fashioned Sean. But Belinda is pregnant to another man, someone who left her the moment the going got tough. How could she burden another man with this responsibility when he has enough on his plate?

If you've read Ghost of a Chance you will be familiar with Sean O'Shea and how he didn't have a ghost of a chance of finding love with Natalie Scott.

Giving Up The Ghost is a romantic comedy of approx 45,000 words, and is full of laughs, heart-felt emotion, and sizzling encounters of the sexual kind.
