She could stay at home and attempt to live on the equivalent of a $7 an hour job. This scheme, however, wouldnt give her a true picture of the life lived by a menial worker. According to The Preamble Center for Public Policy, the odds were 97 to 1 against a recent welfare recipient finding a job that paid a living wage. Barbara decided she had to personally battle those odds to understand how the working poor live. In addition, Ms. Ehrenreich holds a doctorate in biology. Rule two: She had to take the highest paying job that was offered and do her best to hold it. Rule three: She must live in the cheapest place available, within a given range of safety and privacy. Over time, Barbara bent all of these rules. Filling out job applications presented the next problem. She reinvented herself as a recently divorced homemaker returning to work after many years.
