Surviving Political Campaigns, Politicians, and Politics: Laugh, Smile, Learn, Get Angry, Curse
Robert a Nowlan Phd
There are issues in National Politics that need to be explored in every presidential election. However, candidates have become less and less forthcoming with what they can bring to the most difficult job in the world. They fear being clear about where they stand on issues may annoy some segment of the electorate and cost them votes. Instead, they resort to mudslinging, character assassination and attack ads. Learn, laugh or, at least, smile at debates on the issues by humorous quotations, stories, and quizzes. You may find some will annoy or make you angry. Good, that's what they should do. There's nothing like good healthy anger to make one feel better. Voters need facts in making up their minds, something to think about beyond the fearmongering absurdities, meaningless statements, and accusations that may be untrue or at least misleading, meant to inspire hatred or at least great distrust of their opponents.
