As the beloved illegitimate daughter of a billionaire railroad tycoon, Kitty Jones should have had a comfortable life. But soon after her father passes away, she is forced to go on the run when someone hired by her half-brother tries to kill her. While hiding in Lawrence, Massachusetts, working at a textile factory, the mill is torched by an unknown arsonist—with the workers still inside. Desperate for safety, Kitty accepts a position in a location where her brother will never find her: Hawaii.

Warren Castle, the owner of the Castle Sugar Plantation, has no intention of marrying for convenience, regardless of his company's needs. But when he sets eyes on his foreman's mail-order bride, he's determined that she'll marry no one but him.

After Kitty's life is threatened, Warren convinces her to marry him for his protection, regardless of the consequences. But when someone unexpected turns against them, it'll take everything in Warren's power to keep her alive.
