Daughter of the Don: A Detective Capella Crime Novel Jackie Holiday
A fast paced Mafia tale of kidnapping, murder, love and betrayal. While investigating the Nancy Miller case, Boston Detective Tony Capella had fallen for the petite blonde now sleeping beside him. He wasn't sure if he believed in love at first sight, even so, their transcontinental flight was speeding them towards their wedding. What Tony didn't know was that the troubles they thought they'd left behind, in America, were not. Join Tony, Deirdre and Courtney in a tale of kidnapping, murder, love and betrayal. A journey that leads them from Venice to southern Italy, where lying in wait is the beautiful and utterly ruthless, Adelina Vittorio, the Daughter of the Don. Excerpt: The SUVs rocked and bucked as they made their slow way up the treacherous mountain road. Adelina stuck her head out the window and looked down, straight down, at the tops of trees as they hugged the side of the mountain. Adelina had no fear of heights. She smiled and thought, "It is Rico who fears heights, my weakling brother." She turned to the passenger seat, still smiling. Anette returned her smile. Adelina had chosen her group with care. San Marco dei Cavote was well known for its cliffs and general inaccessibility. She had picked only those who could climb and who were light and quick, a real "ninja team", who were, consequently, all women: Anette, Elisabetta, Luciana and Rosaria. Each of whom had proven themselves by: assassination with knife or poison, the theft of a string of diamonds, inserting bogus documents at city hall and, most importantly, being able to last five minutes fighting Adelina hand to hand. Adelina had no sisters, but if she had, these would be the ones she would have chosen. She knew these women. She had done jobs with them, gone to clubs and drank with them and she had heard their stories. Stories of their conquests, of the men they had loved, had fought over and had killed for. They were daughters of Capa's, or kitchen workers, it didn't matter, everyone, when called upon, worked and fought for the family. They were the tip of the spear. Their job: to infiltrate the smuggler's mountainous defenses and to clear the way for the Vittorio "heavy troops", who stood by at the base of the mountain, concealed, awaiting Adelina's signal. Night had fallen. Adelina donned a pair of infrared night-vision goggles and the rough terrain changed from grey to green. Daughter of the Don is the second in the Detective Capella series, following Murder in the E.R. They can be read singularly, however they are best experienced in sequence. Daughter of the Don was formerly published under the title Murder in the Land of the Witches.
